Purpose of Committees

What is a Board Committee?

A board creates committees to focus on specific issues, activities or programs. Because the board has many responsibilities, committees help manage the work by dealing with assigned matters and providing advice and recommendations to the board.

Bylaws or operating rules describe the board's "standing committees." The board chairperson can also establish additional committees, if they are needed to take on specific activities. The chairperson approves committee assignments and selects board members as committee chairpersons.

A committee is usually composed of board members and may include community members and persons served by the organization. All committees report on their progress to the full board.

- Standing committee – permanent and manages essential business of the Board.
- Advisory committee – permanent or temporary and provides study and advice on particular topics.
- Ad hoc committee – temporary and ends when limited assignments are completed.
